This year marks issue number seven of Turning Pages – a number that is sometimes seen as unlucky in certain cultures. But in fact, we all feel the luckier to present a new issue filled with exciting and insightful contributions, for which we are truly grateful.

We would especially like to thank this year's opener, Mark Brown, for taking us on a poetic journey through the six towns near Manchester. Our thanks go to Julia Davis-Nosko for sharing her family history as it intersects with present-day Chemnitz and for offering us ever-new perspectives. We are grateful to Jane Roberts and Christin Hoene for their thought-provoking outer space texts, which invite us to reconsider our ideas of science and discovery. We deeply appreciate Kate Wagstaff's once again sensitive and moving story, as well as Jane Boulden's contributions, which so often leave us quietly speechless. Many thanks to Sreejata Roy for generously sharing her city poems with us. And as always, we are thankful to Emma Fischer for her continued editorial support and her unique poetic voice.

Finally, our heartfelt thanks go to everyone who submitted their texts and photographs – your contributions make Turning Pages one of the most rewarding and joyful publications we look forward to every year.
