

Philip Jacobi

Postmillennial Speculative Fiction
and the Culture of Longing

Ute Fendler, Stephan Kohl, Werner Röcke,
Gerold Sedlmayr (Hg.)

LIR

Literatur – Imagination – Realität

Anglistische, germanistische, romanistische Studien

Band 51

Philip Jacobi

Postmillennial Speculative Fiction
and the Culture of Longing

 Wissenschaftlicher Verlag Trier

Jacobi, Philip:

Postmillennial Speculative Fiction

and the Culture of Longing / Philip Jacobi. -

Trier: WVT Wissenschaftlicher Verlag Trier, 2016

(Literatur, Imagination, Realität; Bd. 51)

ISBN 978-3-86821-668-4

Zugl.: Diss., Universität Passau, 2013

Cover Image: Matthis Dierkes (mys) / photocase.de

Cover Design: Brigitta Disseldorf

© WVT Wissenschaftlicher Verlag Trier, 2016

ISBN 978-3-86821-668-4

No part of this book, covered by the copyright hereon, may be reproduced or used in any form or by any means without prior permission of the publisher.

WVT Wissenschaftlicher Verlag Trier

Bergstraße 27, 54295 Trier

Postfach 4005, 54230 Trier

Tel.: (0651) 41503

Fax: (0651) 41504

Internet: <http://www.wvttrier.de>

E-Mail: wvt@wvttrier.de

Acknowledgements

First and foremost, I would like to thank my supervisor, Professor Jürgen Kamm, for his guidance, patience and advice. After a brief flirtation with North America, it was his lectures that inspired me to look at British Literature instead and to be an academic. I have yet to regret this decision, but then again I doubt I ever will. Throughout my time at the Chair of English Literature and Culture at the University of Passau, he unflinchingly entertained every bout of academic whimsy on my part and provided me with insight and encouragement during the writing of this book. Second, I cannot thank my co-adviser Professor Gerold Sedlmayr enough. It feels trite and insufficient to merely say that I appreciate his crucial critical input during the project and his unwavering willingness to go above and beyond to shepherd this book to completion. He was and is an inspiration to me: in fact, I feel deeply indebted to him for teaching me what it actually means to be an academic (with an impeccable taste in music).

It is only my name on the cover of this book, yet as every author knows, I owe its existence to my friends and (former) colleagues at the University of Passau. Without their encouragement, my coping mechanisms would often have got the better of me. Joanna Rostek has taught me the benefits of cutting the crap and to the chase. When I consider our time together, I will gladly admit she has always been a ‘giver’ to me. Plus, she laughs at my jokes. Stephan Karschay and I have shared an office for eight years: we were the original odd couple and I like to think we profited greatly from each other. I realise, now that we are at different ends of the country and we have offices of our own, what I have lost: a personal dictionary and pronunciation guide, a complete annotated works of everything, and – most importantly – a dear friend. I am the poorer for it. Dorothea Will, who was my colleague, is currently my neighbour, and hopefully will forever be my friend, was at my side from the very beginning and I thank her most for leading by example when it came to crunch time, her limitless knowledge about how things work, and her aptitude for keeping me grounded and fed. Daniel Schulze is the original wide-eyed child and has shown me how excitement leads to leaping and to magically appearing nets. He is also one of my favourite entertainers: I still have most of the sticky notes he wrote me ten years ago and this comedic gold has carried me through many a rough patch. We both reached for the stars and grabbed the lowest ones we could! I would also like to give my warmest thanks to Nora A. Pleßke, who staunchly endured hours of my procrastination in her office while supplying me with a plethora of helpful theory, to Professor Bernd Lenz, who to me is the epitome of enthusiasm, and to Professor Anette Pankratz, who, instead of giving me a part in her production with the English Drama Group, got me my first tutoring gig at the chair – I think ultimately I got the better end of the deal.

I also thank my publisher, specifically Dr. Erwin Otto at Wissenschaftlicher Verlag Trier, for his care, support, and patience. Special thanks go out to Jane Kelly, who gave me permission to reprint her paintings, and Charles Thomson, whose Stuckist manifesto had a big part in confirming what I had been wondering about all along.

The contents of this book are, much like me, a product of oscillation: I thank my father, Frank, for buying me my first SF novel, for his bravery to let me carve out my own path and for showing me the stars. I thank my mother, Elvira, for her unconditional faith in me, her enviable pragmatism, and for showing me that the stars have meaning. Together, my parents mark two extremes of a spectrum and I am happy to be aware of both ends. Lastly, I wholeheartedly thank Matthias for bearing with me, for encouraging me, for the comfort and companionship he provided, for keeping his sense of humour when it seemed I had lost mine, and for helping me chase this horizon of a book.

Contents

1.	Introduction	1
2.	Millennial Moments	26
2.1	Postmillennial Culture, SF, and Future-Nostalgia	31
2.2	Post Mortem and Beyond: Postmodernism and Postmillennial Sensibilities	36
2.3	Literary Postmillennialism(s)	48
2.3.1	Mercurial Forms: Postmillennial Unreliability	50
2.3.2	Residual Sentiments: Postmillennial Nostalgia	57
2.3.3	Interstitial Topographies: Postmillennial Spatiality.....	64
2.4	Conclusion: A Manifesto of Postmillennial Literary Aesthetics....	71
3.	The Ashes: Apocalypse and the Self	73
3.1	Narrative Lost: Jeff Noon's Falling Out of Cars (2002)	76
3.2	Narrative Regained: Sarah Hall's The Carhullan Army (2007)	87
3.3	Conclusion: Coping with the Millennium	96
4.	Letting Go: Finite Narratives.....	98
4.1	Complete: Kazuo Ishiguro's Never Let Me Go (2005)	101
4.2	Incomplete: Jane Rogers' The Testament of Jessie Lamb (2011)..	116
4.3	Conclusion: Half Lives.....	129
5.	Coda: Other Worlds.....	132
6.	Conclusion: The Culture of Longing	150
	Works Cited.....	157
	List of Abbreviations	172
	Index of Figures	173